INTRODUCTION

As I started this annual edition, it was with a myriad of mixed feelings. I wondered if there would be a large number of publishers or publications reporting they were going out of business or closing their doors to freelance submissions—given the state of the economy. I wondered if there was any way to add anything new to a book I had been perfecting for 25 years. What could I possibly do to make the guide even more helpful to my faithful readers? Well, I'm happy to report that none of those fears were realized.

As I went to work on the new guide, I couldn't ignore the ideas for improvements that kept coming to mind. Although there are a few smaller changes I probably don't need to mention, there are some I am really excited about. Many years ago I started highlighting the phrases that indicated the amount of subsidy publishing each publisher did, or identifying the periodicals that didn't pay. This year, I realized that in most cases that was not as important to the writer for royalty publishers as it was to know what they paid in royalties and advances. Starting with this edition, the phrase indicating such payment is highlighted.

The same is true for the periodical publishers. I am still highlighting those who do not pay, but also highlighting what the pay rate is for those that do pay. Since that is always a prime concern for writers, it will make it helpful in recognizing immediately where they fall on the payment scale—as well as helping to compare publishers in the same genre or section of the guide. Several periodicals have lowered their subscription rates, and most now have a Website.

Over the years I have always gotten a few comments from publishers who say writers who submit to them don't read their guidelines first—some even drop their listings in the guide for that reason. So as I thought about that, I realized that even though most publishers now have their guidelines on their Website, finding them is often a frustrating problem for the interested writer. For that reason, this year most of the listings will include the path you follow on each site to find those guidelines (those that are missing are ones I couldn't find). My hope is that this will make it easier for writers to carefully read the guidelines before submitting—a critical step if you want to sell in today's tighter market. I noticed that more book publishers than periodical publishers have guidelines on their Website. Hopefully, periodical publishers will close that gap in the next year as they recognize it is to their advantage to have them readily available.

I'm also always looking for the industry or marketing changes that affect the writer. This year I've noticed that many more publishers are dropping their fax numbers or even their addresses and depending almost entirely on e-mail or Website contacts. Curious about how many publishers or periodicals we lost over the last year—either going out of business or closing their doors to freelance—I counted and came up with 27 book publishers and 60 periodicals. Not as bad as I had feared. I was even surprised by the number of new markets I was able to add: 25 book publishers and 29 periodicals. So even with those losses, we still have 383 book publishers and 605 periodicals listed.

The "Resources for Writers" section, which continues to be available only on the optional CD, includes 190 new entries, bringing the total number of Website links to nearly 2,200. This wealth of information would make the CD a bargain if that were all it contained. My thanks to Donna Schlachter for the hard work and care she puts into preparing this section each year.

This year I want to remind you again not to rely entirely on the topical listings for potential markets. Many good markets never fill out their list of topics, so you are likely to miss opportunities if you look only at that list. I encourage you to spend time perusing each listing and looking for more opportunities to sell what you write.

Since a number of periodical publishers are now accepting assignments only, it is even more important that you establish a reputation in your areas of interest and expertise. Once you have acquired a number of credits in a given field, write to some of those assignment-only editors, giving your credits, and ask for an assignment. In general, you will be better off striving to get an assignment than hoping to fill one of the few slots left for unsolicited material.

Last year the agent list dropped to 75, but this year it's back up to 80 with 9 new listings. It is still crucial that you carefully check out agents before signing a contract or committing to work with them. See the introduction to the agent section for some tips on how to do that. Because contacting agents has become more important in a writer's quest for publication, I indicate which conferences have agents, as well as editors, on staff. Attending conferences is becoming one of the best ways to make contact with agents as well as publishers.

If you are new to this Guide or only want to find specific markets for your work, you'll want to check out the supplementary lists that appear throughout the book. Read through the glossary and spend a few minutes learning terms you are not familiar with. Review the lists of writers' groups and conferences, and mark those you might be interested in pursuing. The denominational and corporate-family listings will help you start connecting periodicals and book publishers with their different denominations or publishing groups. With so many publishers being bought out or merging, this will help keep you up-to-date on the new members of these growing families.

Also be sure to study the "How to Use This Book" section. It will save you time trying to understand the meanings of the notations in the primary listings, and it's full of helpful hints. Remember to send for a catalog and guidelines or sample copies from any of the publishers or periodicals you are not familiar with. Study those carefully before submitting anything to that publisher or periodical. Also realize that publishers who make their guidelines available on their Websites do sometimes include more or different information online than you get in the usual guidelines sheet.

One of the most common complaints I've received from publishers over the years is that the material they receive is often not appropriate for their needs. Editors tell me repeatedly that they are looking for writers who understand their periodical or publishing house and its unique approach to the marketplace. With a little time and effort, you can meet an editor's expectations, distinguish yourself as a professional, and sell what you write.

Please also note that I have started a marketing blog (see below) where you can find all kinds of information about the industry and keep your market guide up-to-date during the year. I make entries almost every day.

Finally, my special thanks to Patrick Schlachter for developing and overseeing the database I use to produce the guide each year. I couldn't do it without his professional help. He's also open to helping others with their computer needs, so check out his listing in the "Resources for Writers" section on the CD.

As always, I wish you well as you travel this exciting road to publication, whether for the first time or as a longtime veteran. And as I remind you every year, each of you has been given a specific mission in the field of writing. You and I often feel inadequate for the task, but I learned a long time ago that the writing assignments God has given me could not be written quite as well by anyone else.

HOW TO USE THIS BOOK

The purpose of this market guide is to make your marketing job easier and more targeted. It will serve you well, however, only if you use it as a springboard for becoming an expert on those publishers best suited to your writing topics and style. The following explanations and guidelines will help you become an expert on marketing yourself.

1. Spend time getting acquainted with the setup of this resource book. You cannot make the best use of it until you know exactly what it has to offer. Study the table of contents, where you will find comprehensive listings of periodical and book topics.

2. When looking at the topical sections, be sure to check topics related to your primary subject. Some cross-referencing may be helpful. For example, if you have a novel that deals with doctor-assisted suicide, you might look at the list for adult fiction and the list for controversial issues and see which publishers are on both lists. Those would be good potential markets. In the topical sections you will find a letter R following both book and periodical publishers that accept reprints (pieces that have been printed by other publishers/publications but for which you retain the rights). You will find a dollar sign ($) in front of the periodicals that are paying markets. That will help you find those quickly when getting paid is your primary goal for a particular piece. There is an A in front of the names of book publishers that require the use of an agent.

3. In each book-publisher listing you will find the following information (as available) in this format:

- (a) Name of publisher
- (b) Address, phone and fax numbers, e-mail address, Website
- (c) Denomination or affiliation
- (d) Name of editor—This may include the senior editor's name, followed by the name of another editor to whom submissions should be sent. In a few cases, several editors are named with the types of books each is responsible for. Address any correspondence to the appropriate editor.
- (e) Statement of purpose
- (f) List of imprint names
- (g) Number of inspirational/religious titles published per year, followed by formats of books published (hardcover, trade paperbacks, mass-market paperbacks, coffee-table books). Note that coffee-table books have a listing in the topical listings for books.
- (h) Number of submissions received annually
- (i) Percentage of books from first-time authors
- (j) (Usually) whether the publisher accepts, prefers, requires, or doesn't accept manuscripts through agents
- (k) Percentage of books from freelance authors they subsidy publish (if any). This does not refer to percentage paid by author. If percentage of subsidy is over 50 percent, the publisher will be listed in a separate section under "Subsidy Publishers."
- (l) Whether they reprint out-of-print books from other publishers
- (m) Preferred manuscript length in words or pages; "pages" refers to double-spaced manuscript pages.
- (n) Average amount of royalty, if provided. If royalty is a percentage of wholesale or net, it is based on price paid by bookstores or distributors. If it is on retail price, it is based on cover price of the book.
- (o) Average amount paid for advances. Whether publishers pay an advance or not is noted in the listing; if they did not answer the question, there is no mention of it.

- (p) Whether they pay flat fees (in these cases the author receives no royalties)
- (q) Average first printing (number of books usually printed for a first-time author)
- (r) Average length of time between acceptance of a manuscript and publication of the work
- (s) Whether they consider simultaneous submissions. This means you can send a query or complete manuscript simultaneously to more than one publisher, as long as you advise everyone involved that you are doing so.
- (t) Length of time it should take them to respond to a query/proposal or to a complete manuscript (when two lengths of time are given, the first refers to a query and the latter to a complete manuscript). Give them a one-month grace period beyond that, and then send a polite follow-up letter if you haven't heard from them.
- (u) Whether a publisher "accepts," "prefers," or "requires" the submission of an accepted manuscript on disk. (Do not send your unsolicited manuscripts/submissions on disk.) Most publishers now do accept or require that books be sent on a computer disk (usually along with a hard copy) or by e-mail, but since each publisher's needs are different, that information will be supplied to you by the individual publisher when the time comes. This section also indicates whether publishers accept submissions by e-mail and whether they want one sent as an attachment or copied into the message.
- (v) Which Bible version the publisher may prefer
- (w) Whether they do print-on-demand publishing
- (x) Availability and cost of writer's guidelines and book catalogs. If the listing says "Guidelines," it means guidelines are available for a #10 (business size) SASE with a first-class stamp. The cost of the catalog (if any), the size of envelope, and amount of postage are given, if specified (affix stamps to envelope; don't send them loose). Tip: If postage required would be more than $2.38, I suggest you put $2.38 in postage on the envelope and clearly mark it "Media Mail." (That is enough for up to one pound.) If the listing says "free catalog," it means you need only request it; they do not ask for payment or an SASE. Note: If sending for both guidelines and catalog, it is not necessary to send two envelopes; guidelines will be sent with the catalog. The listing will also indicate whether guidelines are available by e-mail or on the Website.
- (y) Nonfiction and Fiction sections indicate preference for query letter, book proposal, or complete manuscript, and whether they accept phone, fax, or e-queries. (If it does not say they accept them, assume they do not; this reference applies to fiction as well as non-fiction.) If they want a query letter, send just a letter describing your project. If they want a query letter/proposal, you can add a chapter-by-chapter synopsis and sample chapters. If not specified, send from one to three chapters. This data is often followed by a quote from the publishers about their needs or what they don't want to see.
- (z) Special Needs—If a publisher has specific needs, especially those that are not included in the subject listings, they are indicated here.
 - (aa) Ethnic Books—Usually specifies which ethnic groups they target
 - (bb) Also Does—Indicates which publishers also publish booklets, pamphlets, tracts, or e-books
 - (cc) Photos/Artwork—Indicates whether they accept freelance photos for book covers. If interested, contact them for details or photography guidelines. This year I have also added information on whether publishers will accept queries about artwork from freelancers.
 - (dd) Tips—Specific tips provided by the editor/publisher

Note: At the end of some listings you will find an indication that the publisher receives mailings of book proposals from The Writer's Edge (see "Editorial Services/Illinois" for an explanation of that service) and/or ChristianManuscriptSubmissions.com (see Website or index).

4. In each periodical listing you will find the following information (as available) in this format:
- (a) Name of periodical
 - (b) Address, phone and fax numbers, e-mail address, Website
 - (c) Denomination or affiliation
 - (d) Name of senior editor and editor to submit to (if different)
 - (e) Theme of publication
 - (f) Format of publication, frequency of publication, number of pages, and size of circulation. Format refers to whether it is a magazine, newsletter, journal, tabloid, newspaper, or take-home paper. Frequency of publication and number of pages are both indicators of how much material the publishers can use. Circulation indicates the amount of exposure your material will receive and often indicates how well the publishers might pay or the probability that they will stay in business.
 - (g) Subscription rate—Amount given is for a one-year subscription in the country of origin. I suggest you subscribe to at least one of your primary markets every year to become better acquainted with its specific focus.
 - (h) Date established—Included only if 2007 or later
 - (i) Openness to freelance work; percentage of freelance written. This indicates the percentage of unsolicited freelance versus assigned articles. Since not all publishers have responded to this question, some will still give the two percentages combined or indicate only the unsolicited number. If they buy only a small percentage, it often means they are open but receive little material that is appropriate. When you have a choice, choose those with the higher percentage of freelance-written work, but only if you have done your homework and know they are an appropriate market for your material.
 - (j) Preference for query or complete manuscript also tells whether they want a cover letter with complete manuscripts and whether they accept phone, fax, or e-mail queries. If it does not mention cover letters or phone, fax, or e-mail queries, assume they do not accept them.
 - (k) Payment schedule, payment on acceptance (they pay when the piece is accepted) or on publication (they pay when it is published), and rights purchased. (See glossary for definitions of different rights.)
 - (l) If a publication does not pay or pays in copies or subscription, that is indicated in bold capital letters.
 - (m) If a publication is not copyrighted, you should ask for your copyright notice to appear on your published piece so your rights will be protected.
 - (n) Preferred word lengths and average number of manuscripts purchased per year (in parentheses)
 - (o) Response time—The time they usually take to respond to your query or manuscript submission. (Add at least two weeks for mail delays.)
 - (p) Seasonal material (also refers to holiday)—Holiday or seasonal material should reach them by at least the specified length of time in advance.
 - (q) Acceptance of simultaneous submissions and reprints—If they accept simultaneous submissions, it means they will look at submissions (usually a timely topic or holiday material) sent simultaneously to several publishers. It's best to send to nonoverlapping markets (such as denominational), and be sure to indicate that it is a simultaneous submission. Reprints are pieces you have sold previously but to which you hold the rights (which means you sold only first or onetime rights to the original publisher and the rights reverted to you as soon as they were published).
 - (r) Whether they accept, prefer, or require submissions on disk or by e-mail. Many now prefer an e-mail submission rather than on disk. Most will want a query or hard copy first. If it does not say they prefer or require disks, you should wait to see if they ask for them. If they accept an e-mail submission, it will indicate whether they want it as an attached file or copied into the message. If it says they accept e-mail submissions but doesn't indicate a reference, it usually means they will take them either way.

- (s) Average kill-fee amount (see glossary for definition), if they pay one
- (t) Whether or not they use sidebars (see glossary for definition) and whether they do so regularly or occasionally
- (u) Their preferred Bible version—The version most frequently listed is the NIV (New International Version). If no version is indicated, they usually have no preference. See glossary for “Bible Versions” list.
- (v) Whether they accept submissions from children or teens. A list of the publishers open to submissions from young writers is in the topical listings under “Young-Writer Markets.”
- (w) Availability and cost for writer's guidelines, theme lists, and sample copies—If the listing says “Guidelines,” it means they are available for a #10 SASE (business size) with a first-class stamp. Many more now have guidelines available by e-mail or Website, and the listing will indicate that. The cost for a sample copy, the size of envelope, and number of stamps required are given, if specified (affix stamps to envelope; don't send them loose). Tips: (1) If postage required is more than $2.38, I suggest you put $2.38 in postage on the envelope and clearly mark it “Media Mail.” (That is enough for up to one pound.) If the listing says “free sample copy,” it means you need only to request it; they do not ask for payment or an SASE. (2) If you're sending for both guidelines and sample copy, it is not necessary to send two envelopes; guidelines will be sent with sample copy. If a listing doesn't mention guidelines or sample copy, they probably don't have them.
- (x) “Not in topical listings” means the publisher has not supplied a list of topics it is interested in. Send for guidelines or study sample copies to determine topics used.
- (y) Poetry—Name of poetry editor (if different). Average number of poems bought each year. Types of poetry. Number of lines. Payment rate. Maximum number of poems you may submit at one time.
- (z) Fillers—Name of fillers editor (if different). Types of fillers accepted; word length. Payment rate.
- (aa) Columns/Departments—Name of column editor (if different). Names of columns in the periodical (information in parentheses gives focus of column); word-length requirements. Payment rate. Be sure to see sample before sending ms or query. Most columns require a query.
- (bb) Special Issues or Needs—Indicates topics of special issues they have planned for the year or unique topics not included in regular subject listings
- (cc) Ethnic—Any involvement they have in the ethnic market
- (dd) Contest—Information on contests they sponsor or how to obtain that information. See “Contest” section at back of book for full list of contests.
- (ee) Tips—Tips from the editor on how to break into this market or how to be successful as an author
- (ff) At the end of some listings you will find a notation about where that particular periodical placed in the Top 50+ Christian Periodicals list in 2009 and/or its place in previous years. This list is compiled annually to indicate the most writer-friendly publications. To receive a complete listing, plus a prepared analysis sheet and writer's guidelines for the top 50 of those markets, send $25 (includes postage) to Sally Stuart, 1647 S.W. Pheasant Dr., Aloha OR 97006, or order from www.stuartmarket.com.
- (gg) Some listings also include EPA winners. These awards are made annually by the Evangelical Press Association (a trade organization for Christian periodicals). This section also indicates the top-ten best-selling magazines in Christian retail stores.

5. It is important that you adhere closely to the guidelines set out in these listings. If a publisher asks for a query only, do not send a complete manuscript. Following these guidelines will mark you as a professional.

6. If your manuscript is completed, select the proper topical listing and target audience, and make up a list of possible publishers. Check first to see which ones will accept a complete manuscript (if you want to send it to those that require a query, you will have to write a query letter or book proposal to send first). Please do not assume that your manuscript will be appropriate for all those on the list. Read the primary listing for each, and if you are not familiar with a publisher, read its writer's guidelines and study one or more sample copies or the book catalog. (The primary listings tell how to get these.) Be sure the slant of your manuscript fits the slant of the publisher.

7. If you have an idea for an article, short story, or book but you have not written it yet, reading the appropriate topical listing will help you decide on a possible slant or approach. Select some publishers to whom you might send a query about your idea. If your idea is for an article, do not overlook the possibility of writing on the same topic for a number of different periodicals listed under that topic, either with the same target audience or another from the list. For example, you could write on money management for a general adult magazine, a teen magazine, a women's publication, or a magazine for pastors. Each would require a different slant, but you would get a lot more mileage from that idea.

8. If you do not have an idea, simply start reading through the topical listings or the primary listings. They are sure to trigger any number of book or magazine article ideas you could go to work on.

9. If you run into words or terms you are not familiar with, check the glossary at the back of the book for definitions.

10. If you need someone to look at your material to evaluate it or to give it a thorough editing, look up the section on "Editorial Services," and find someone to send it to for such help. That often will make the difference between success or failure in publishing.

11. If you are a published author with other books to your credit, you may be interested in finding an agent. Some agents will consider unpublished authors (their listing will indicate that), but many require an author to have a completed manuscript before being considered (see agent list). Christian agents are at a premium, so it can be hard to find an agent unless you have had some success in book writing. The agent list also includes secular agents who handle religious/inspirational material.

12. Check the "Group" list to find a group to join in your area. Go to the "Conference" list to find a conference you might attend this year. Attending a conference every year or two is almost essential to your success as a writer, especially when you get into book writing.

13. Send an SASE with every query or manuscript. If you do not want your manuscript returned, indicate that in your cover letter, and send a #10 SASE for the acceptance or rejection letter.

14. Do not rely solely on the information provided in this guide! It is just that—a guide—and is not intended to be complete by itself. It is important to your success as a freelance writer that you learn how to use writer's guidelines and study book catalogs or sample copies before submitting to any publisher.

PART 1

Book Publishers

Topical/Subject Listings of Book Publishers

One of the most difficult aspects of marketing is trying to determine which publishers might be interested in the book you want to write. This topical listing was designed to help you do just that.

First, look up your topic of interest in the following lists. If you don't find the specific topic, check the list of topics in the table of contents, find any related topics, and pursue those. Once you have discovered which publishers are interested in a particular topic, the next step is to secure writer's guidelines and book catalogs from those publishers. Just because a particular publisher is listed under your topic, don't assume that it would automatically be interested in your book. It is your job to determine whether your approach to the subject will fit within the unique scope of that publisher's catalog. It is also helpful to visit a Christian bookstore to actually see some of the books produced by each publisher you are interested in pursuing.

Note, too, that the primary listings for each publisher indicate what the publisher prefers to see in the initial contact—a query, book proposal, or complete manuscript.

An (a) before a listing indicates the publisher accepts submissions only through agents. These appear at the top of each topical list.

An R indicates which publishers reprint out-of-print books from other publishers.

An asterisk (*) following a topic indicates it is a new topic this year.

An (s) before a listing indicates it is a publisher listed in the Subsidy Publishers' section and does at least 50% subsidy publishing or print-on-demand. Please note that some of these publishers do some royalty publishing as well (check their listings), so if you aren't interested in a subsidy deal, you can contact them indicating you are interested only in a royalty contract.

Glossary of Terms

Note: This glossary is not intended to be exhaustive. It includes primarily terms found in this market guide.

Advance: Amount of money a publisher pays to an author up front, against future royalties. The amount varies greatly from publisher to publisher, and is often paid in two or three installments (on signing contract, on delivery of manuscript, and on publication).

All rights: An outright sale of your material. Author has no further control over it.

Anecdote: A short, poignant, real-life story, usually used to illustrate a single thought.

Assignment: When an editor asks a writer to write a specific piece for an agreed-upon price.

As-told-to story: A true story you write as a first-person account, but about someone else.

Audiobooks: Books available on CDs.

Avant-garde: Experimental; ahead of the times.

Backlist: A publisher's previously published books that are still in print a year after publication.

B & W: Abbreviation for a black and white photograph.

Bar code: Identification code and price on the back of a book read by a scanner at checkout counters.

Bible versions: AMP—Amplified Bible; ASV—American Standard Version; CEV—Contemporary English Version; ESV—English Standard Version; GNB—Good News Bible; HCSB—Holman Christian Standard Bible; ICB—International Children's Bible; KJV—King James Version; MSG—The Message; NAB—New American Bible; NAS—New American Standard; NEB—New English Bible; NIRV—New International Reader's Version; NIV—New International Version; NJB—New Jerusalem Bible; NKJV—New King James Version; NLT—New Living Translation; NRSV—New Revised Standard Version; RSV—Revised Standard Version; TLB—The Living Bible; TNIV—Today's New International Version.

Bimonthly: Every two months.

Bio sketch: Information on the author.

Biweekly: Every two weeks.

Bluelines: Printer's proofs used to catch errors before a book is printed.

Book proposal: Submission of a book idea to an editor; usually includes a cover letter, thesis statement, chapter-by-chapter synopsis, market survey, and 1-3 sample chapters.

Byline: Author's name printed just below the title of a story, article, etc.

Camera-ready copy: The text and artwork for a book that are ready for the press.

Chapbook: A small book or pamphlet containing poetry, religious readings, etc.

Circulation: The number of copies sold or distributed of each issue of a publication.

Clips: See "Published clips."

Column: A regularly appearing feature, section, or department in a periodical using the same heading; written by the same person or a different freelancer each time.

Concept statement: A 50-150 word summary of your proposed book.

Contributor's copy: Copy of an issue of a periodical sent to the author whose work appears in it.

Copyright: Legal protection of an author's work.

Cover letter: A letter that accompanies some manuscript submissions. Usually needed only if you have to tell the editor something specific or to give your credentials for writing a piece of a technical nature. Also used to remind the editor that a manuscript was requested or expected.

Credits, list of: A listing of your previously published works.

Critique: An evaluation of a piece of writing.

Defamation: A written or spoken injury to the reputation of a living person or organization. If what is said is true, it cannot be defamatory.

Derivative work: A work derived from another work, such as a condensation or abridgement. Contact copyright owner for permission before doing the abridgement and be prepared to pay that owner a fee or royalty.

Devotional: A short piece that shares a personal spiritual discovery, inspires to worship, challenges to commitment or action, or encourages.

Editorial guidelines: See "Writer's guidelines."

Electronic submission: The submission of a proposal or article to an editor by electronic means, such as by e-mail or on disk.

Endorsements: Flattering comments about a book; usually carried on the back cover or in promotional material.

EPA/Evangelical Press Assn: A professional trade organization for periodical publishers and associate members.

E-proposals: Proposals sent via e-mail.

E-queries: Queries sent via e-mail.

Eschatology: The branch of theology that is concerned with the last things, such as death, judgment, heaven, and hell.

Essay: A short composition usually expressing the author's opinion on a specific subject.

Evangelical: A person who believes that one receives God's forgiveness for sins through Jesus Christ, and believes the Bible is an authoritative guide for daily living.

Exegesis: Interpretation of the Scripture.

Feature article: In-depth coverage of a subject, usually focusing on a person, an event, a process, an organization, a movement, a trend or issue; written to explain, encourage, help, analyze, challenge, motivate, warn, or entertain as well as to inform.

Filler: A short item used to "fill" out the page of a periodical. It could be a timeless news item, joke, anecdote, light verse or short humor, puzzle, game, etc.

First rights: Editor buys the right to publish your piece for the first time.

- Foreign rights: Selling or giving permission to translate or reprint published material in a foreign country.
- Foreword: Opening remarks in a book introducing the book and its author.
- Freelance: As in 50% freelance: means that 50% of the material printed in the publication is supplied by freelance writers.
- Freelancer or freelance writer: A writer who is not on salary but sells his material to a number of different publishers.
- Free verse: Poetry that flows without any set pattern.
- Galley proof: A typeset copy of a book manuscript used to detect and correct errors before the final print run.
- Genre: Refers to type or classification, as in fiction or poetry. Such types as westerns, romances, mysteries, etc., are referred to as genre fiction.
- Glossy: A black-and-white photo with a shiny, rather than matte, finish.
- Go-ahead: When a publisher tells you to go ahead and write up or send your article idea.
- Haiku: A Japanese lyric poem of a fixed 17-syllable form.
- Hard copy: A typed manuscript, as opposed to one on disk or in an e-mail.
- Holiday/seasonal: A story, article, filler, etc., that has to do with a specific holiday or season. This material must reach the publisher the stated number of months prior to the holiday/season.
- Homiletics: The art of preaching.
- Honorarium: If a publisher indicates they pay an honorarium, it means they pay a small flat fee, as opposed to a set amount per word.
- Humor: The amusing or comical aspects of life that add warmth and color to an article or story.
- Interdenominational: Distributed to a number of different denominations.
- International Postal Reply Coupon: See "IRC."
- Interview article: An article based on an interview with a person of interest to a specific readership.
- IRC or IPRC: International Postal Reply Coupon: can be purchased at your local post office and should be enclosed with a manuscript sent to a foreign publisher.
- ISBN: International Standard Book Number; an identification code needed for every book.
- Journal: A periodical presenting news in a particular area.
- Kill fee: A fee paid for a completed article done on assignment that is subsequently not published. Amount is usually 25-50% of original payment.
- Libel: To defame someone by an opinion or a misquote and put his or her reputation in jeopardy.
- Light verse: Simple, lighthearted poetry.
- Little/Literary: Small circulation publications whose focus is providing a forum for the literary writer, rather than on making money. Often do not pay, or pay in copies.
- Mainstream fiction: Other than genre fiction, such as romance, mystery, or science fiction. Stories of people and their conflicts handled on a deeper level.

Mass market: Books intended for a wide, general market, rather than a specialized market. These books are produced in a smaller format, usually with smaller type, and are sold at a lower price. The expectation is that their sales will be higher.

Ms: Abbreviation for manuscript.

Mss: Abbreviation for more than one manuscript.

Multiple submissions: Submitting more than one piece at a time to the same publisher, usually reserved for poetry, greeting cards, or fillers, not articles. Also see “Simultaneous submissions.”

NASR: Abbreviation for North American serial rights.

Newsbreak: A newsworthy event or item sent to a publisher who might be interested in publishing it because it would be of interest to his particular readership.

Nondenominational: Not associated with a particular denomination.

Not copyrighted: Publication of your piece in such a publication will put it into public domain and it is not then protected. Ask that the publisher carry your copyright notice on your piece when it is printed.

Novella: A short novel starting at 20,000 words—35,000 words maximum. Length varies from publisher to publisher.

On acceptance: Periodical or publisher pays a writer at the time the manuscript is accepted for publication.

On assignment: Writing something at the specific request of an editor.

Onetime rights: Selling the right to publish a story one time to any number of publications (usually refers to publishing for a nonoverlapping readership).

On publication: Publisher pays a writer when his/her manuscript is published.

On speculation/On spec: Writing something for an editor with the agreement that he will buy it only if he likes it.

Overrun: The extra copies of a book printed during the initial print run.

Over the transom: Unsolicited articles that arrive at a publisher’s office.

Payment on acceptance: See “On acceptance.”

Payment on publication: See “On publication.”

Pen name/pseudonym: Using a name other than your legal name on an article or book in order to protect your identity or the identity of people included, or when the author wishes to remain anonymous. Put the pen name in the byline under the title, and your real name in the upper, left-hand corner.

Permissions: Asking permission to use the text or art from a copyrighted source.

Personal experience story: A story based on a real-life experience.

Personality profile: A feature article that highlights a specific person’s life or accomplishments.

Photocopied submission: Sending an editor a photocopy of your manuscript, rather than an original. Some editors prefer an original.

Piracy: To take the writings of others just as they were written and put your name on them as the author.

- Plagiarism: To steal and use the ideas or writings of another as your own, rewriting them to make them sound like your own.
- Press kit: A compilation of promotional materials on a particular book or author, usually organized in a folder, used to publicize a book.
- Print on Demand (POD): A printing process where books are printed one at a time instead of in quantity. The production cost per book is higher, but no warehousing is necessary. Bookstores typically will not carry POD books.
- Public domain: Work that has never been copyrighted, or on which the copyright has expired. Subtract 75 from the current year, and anything copyrighted prior to that is in public domain.
- Published clips: Copies of actual articles you have had published, from newspapers or magazines.
- Quarterly: Every three months.
- Query letter: A letter sent to an editor telling about an article you propose to write and asking if he or she is interested in seeing it.
- Reporting time: The number of weeks or months it takes an editor to get back to you about a query or manuscript you have sent in.
- Reprint rights: Selling the right to reprint an article that has already been published elsewhere. You must have sold only first or onetime rights originally, and wait until it has been published the first time.
- Review copies: Books given to book reviewers or buyers for chains.
- Royalty: The percentage an author is paid by a publisher on the sale of each copy of a book.
- SAE: Self-addressed envelope (without stamps).
- SAN: Standard Account Number, used to identify libraries, book dealers, or schools.
- SASE: Self-addressed, stamped envelope. Should always be sent with a manuscript or query letter.
- SASP: Self-addressed, stamped postcard. May be sent with a manuscript submission to be returned by publisher indicating it arrived safely.
- Satire: Ridicule that aims at reform.
- Second serial rights: See “Reprint rights.”
- Semiannual: Issued twice a year.
- Serial: Refers to publication in a periodical (such as first serial rights).
- Sidebar: A short feature that accompanies an article and either elaborates on the human interest side of the story or gives additional information on the topic. It is often set apart by appearing within a box or border.
- Simultaneous rights: Selling the rights to the same piece to several publishers simultaneously. Be sure everyone is aware that you are doing so.
- Simultaneous submissions: Sending the same manuscript to more than one publisher at the same time. Usually done with nonoverlapping markets (such as denominational or newspapers) or when you are writing on a timely subject. Be sure to state in a cover letter that it is a simultaneous submission and why.
- Slander: The verbal act of defamation.

- Slanting: Writing an article so that it meets the needs of a particular market.
- Slush pile: The stack of unsolicited manuscripts that have arrived at a publisher's office.
- Speculation: See "On speculation."
- Staff-written material: Material written by the members of a magazine staff.
- Subsidiary rights: All those rights, other than book rights, included in a book contract such as paperback, book club, movie, etc.
- Subsidy publisher: A book publisher who charges the author to publish his book, as opposed to a royalty publisher who pays the author.
- Synopsis: A brief summary of work from one paragraph to several pages long.
- Tabloid: A newspaper-format publication about half the size of a regular newspaper.
- Take-home paper: A periodical sent home from Sunday school each week (usually) with Sunday school students, children through adults.
- Think piece: A magazine article that has an intellectual, philosophical, or provocative approach to a subject.
- Third world: Reference to underdeveloped countries of Asia and Africa.
- Trade magazine: A magazine whose audience is in a particular trade or business.
- Traditional verse: One or more verses with an established pattern that is repeated throughout the poem.
- Transparencies: Positive color slides, not color prints.
- Unsolicited manuscript: A manuscript an editor didn't specifically ask to see.
- Vanity publisher: See "Subsidy publisher."
- Vignette: A short, descriptive literary sketch or a brief scene or incident.
- Vitae/Vita: An outline of one's personal history and experience.
- Work-for-hire: Signing a contract with a publisher stating that a particular piece of writing you are doing for him is work-for-hire. In the agreement you give the publisher full ownership and control of the material.
- Writers' guidelines: An information sheet provided by a publisher that gives specific guidelines for writing for the publication. Always send an SASE with your request for guidelines.

General Index

This index includes periodicals, books, distributors, greeting cards/specialty markets, and agents, as well as some of the organizations/resources and specialty lists or areas you may need to find quickly. Conferences, groups, and editorial services are listed alphabetically by state in those sections (not in the index). Check the table of contents for the location of supplementary listings.

Note: Due to the many changes in the market, and to help you determine the current status of any publisher you might be looking for, all markets (past and present) will be listed in this index. If they are not viable markets, their current status will be indicated here. The following codes will be used:

(ABD) asked to be deleted
(BA) bad address or contact information
(ED) editorial decision
(NF) no freelance
(NR) no recent response
(OB) out of business
(UTC) unable to contact

These changes will be noted in this listing for five years before being dropped altogether.
